

Published on American Geosciences Institute (<https://www.americangeosciences.org>)

Home > EARTH: Endangered Snow: How Climate Change Threatens West Coast Water Supplies

EARTH: Endangered Snow: How Climate Change Threatens West Coast Water Supplies

From Seattle to Los Angeles, anywhere from 50 to 80 percent of the water people use comes from mountain snow. Snow falls in the mountains in the winter, where it's stored as snowpack until spring and summer when it flows down the mountains into reservoirs. It's a clean, reliable source of water. But soon, it may become less dependable, thanks to climate change.

Press Release PDF:

EARTH2July11.pdf
