

SVP: "What Happened to My Humerus?"

Society of Vertebrate Paleontology

In a recent blog post by the Society of Vertebrate Paleontology, author Darin Croft reflects on his experiences as a vertebrate paleontologist and how his career has shaped his outlook on incomplete fossil assemblages, and how his understanding of the taphonomy has matured with experience. Fun brush up for the paleontologists at heart.

Tags:

- geotimes, paleontology, member society
-