

Diamonds reveal water in deep mantle

EARTH Magazine

Inclusions in diamonds often render them undesirable to consumers, but they can provide researchers with striking insights into Earth's composition. Recently, scientists probing diamond samples for the presence of carbon dioxide stumbled instead upon inclusions of ice-VII — a type of crystallized water that forms at very high pressures, and has never before been found in nature.

Read more

---