time-domain electromagnetic method

time-domain electromagnetic method (time'-do-main). Transmission of a single or repetitive pulse of electromagnetic energy, frequently of square wave form, and reception of electromagnetic energy, as a function of time, in the time interval after the transmitted wave form has been turned off. It is used with induced electrical polarization and electromagnetic methods. Abbrev: TDEM. Syn: transient electromagnetic method.

Tags:
- geotimes

Website:

GeoWord of the Day