

Geoscience Continuing Education Support Specialist

Geoscience Continuing Education Support Specialist

American Geosciences Institute, Alexandria, Virginia

The American Geosciences Institute, an Alexandria, VA non-profit is seeking an individual to support AGI's continuing and professional education programs through supporting webinar and online course productions as well as identifying new content opportunities. The person will work with professional geoscientists and other AGI staff to construct new online courses and webinars, identify and cultivate new content opportunities across Earth science and engineering, and work on marketing AGI's capabilities. The employee will also be expected to help AGI's Technology staff on various other technology support needs for the Institute. This position is a full-time one-year term appointment but may be extended if funding is available. The position will be based at AGI's headquarters in Alexandria, VA. The ideal candidate will have at least a bachelor's degree in a geoscience, an interest in science communication, and some familiarity with online learning platforms. Programming or content production experience is a plus. AGI provides equal employment opportunities to all employees and applicants for employment without regard to race, color, religious creed, sex, national origin, ancestry, age, marital status, citizenship, genetic information, sexual orientation, gender identity and expression, mental or physical disability, or protected Veteran status.

Please send resume and salary requirements to: jobs@americangeosciences.org with "Continuing Education Search" in the subject line. Position is open until filled.
