

2001-2002 AGI Fellow David Curtiss

David Curtiss chose to work for Rep. J.C. Watts Jr. (R-OK), who chaired the House Republican Conference, an information resource for all Republican representatives on a variety of issues. Curtiss focused on energy and international relations. Before taking the fellowship, Curtiss was manager of program development and a research scientist at the Energy and Geoscience Institute (EGI) of the University of Utah. He holds a master's degree in Earth Resource Management from the University of South Carolina. After the fellowship, Curtiss returned to EGI for many years. After living back in the DC area as the Director of the Geoscience and Energy Office of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists (AAPG), David now serves as Executive Director of AAPG in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

David Curtiss wrote the following columns in Geotimes:

- A Fellow's Welcome to Washington (12/01)
 - Becoming A Standard Bearer (5/02)
 - Climate Policy That Makes a Difference (8/02)
 - A Year in the Sausage Factory (12/02)
-
- policy
 - congressional geoscience fellow
 - 2001
-